Can a fairy-tale kingdom become the setting for a great mission to save nature? During the performance “Princess and the Eco-Frogs” A Royal Mission for Nature, the youngest audience members will embark on a journey full of humour and adventure, where the magic of theatre combines with a story about why it is important to care for the environment and use natural resources wisely.

The story follows a brave Princess who decides to restore balance in her kingdom, threatened by pollution and irresponsible use of resources. In this extraordinary mission she is joined by two unusual companions – the frogs Kum-Kum and Rehot. In a fun and accessible way, they show young audiences that clean air, healthy ecosystems and the richness of nature are the most valuable assets of any kingdom.

The performance has an interactive format, meaning that children are not only spectators but also active participants in the story. Together with the characters they solve ecological riddles, help make decisions and discover how everyday actions can influence the environment. Thanks to this approach, the message of the play is easy to remember and truly engages young viewers.

The performance introduces topics such as clean air, protection of natural resources, responsible energy use, circular economy and the importance of biodiversity. Through a fairy-tale narrative, children learn that investing in nature means investing in people’s health, quality of life and the future of entire communities.

The play is part of the third edition of theatre performances organised at the Tarnogórskie Centrum Kultury, which through art and entertainment introduce young audiences to the idea of responsible environmental stewardship and building a future that is friendly to nature.

“Princess and the Eco-Frogs” A Royal Mission for Nature reminds us that caring for nature begins with knowledge, imagination and good habits, and that even the youngest can have a real impact on the world they will live in.
